Trimmed With Military Braid

By La Racontense.

Braid trimming is seen on many of the late semi-tailored suits, and undoubtedly it does lend a trim clean cut finish to the garment. Varying widths are used sometimes in matching tone and often in contrasting effect. An apple green cheviot suit is shown here with circular skirt and smart flaring coat. The simple butt on trimmed pique vest is evident in front showing in vivid contrast to the long line of the reverse collar. Black military braid is introduced in this instance, binding the entire edge of the coat, the cuffs and butt on trimmed pockets.

NO MORE MISFITS.

By the time the alienists, the eugenicists, social reformers, and professors are through with us, there will be no more "misfits." A celebrated alienist has suggested that we apply the results of Sir Francis Galton who wrote a book upon the development of faculty and gave a detailed number of experiments upon every variety of human efficiency and the influence of heredity and marriage.

His idea is to try for the "determination of individual fitness and the regulation of the career of the young person." We might help him in the choice of a profession or other vocation if some exact and scientific method could be found to reach a positive conclusion as to his intellectual and social worth. It would at least diminish the deplorable tendency to put "square pegs in round holes," thus saving some youth from embarking upon a career in life which in all probability would be a partial or downright failure.

The choice of a vocation, he says, is as a rule, put off as long as possible the young person buying himself with other things until the time arrives when something must be decided upon. The efforts are the various proposed occupations disqualifications of a bodily and mental nature that as a rule were overlooked and neglected by parents. The children are often absolutely unconscious of the fact that they are at all handicapped. While we can see all around us men and women who were improperly forced into a college career, we should, through the utilization of modern methods of inquiry, detect the many special indications of fitness for the prosecution of the highest kind of specialized life work, the existence of genius, and the domination of certain intellectual combinations that make for success.

He suggests that in every city there should be a board of experts; that the institute should contain men whose purpose is to examine the organs of special sense, the muscular apparatus, as well as the general organic arrangements and its functions; to determine the existence of the capacity for delicate manipulation, accuracy of touch and sense of direction, perfection of co-ordination and the other elements of manual dexterity. There would be a well equipped psychological laboratory and an examiner for the purpose of detecting mental integrity, ethical sense, and scope of mental imagery.

There is at the present time a systematic attempt for vocational fitness. A president of one of our universities suggests radical changes in school methods. He says the present education does not train the senses to act with precision; our habits of thought permit vagueness, obscurity and inaccuracy, and that his spoken or written statement the student lacks that measured, cautious, candid, simple quality which the scientific spirit fosters and inculcates.
